3 To 2 Vote Ends 107-Day News Strike

Photoengravers Only Holdouts In Negotiations

NEW YORK - Union printers voted Sunday to end a record 107-day blackout of the city's eight major daily newspapers. The vote was 2,562-1,763.

Although agreement with another union—the photoengravers was still to be reached, publishers and labor spokesmen freely predicted the presses would roll again this week, possibly with Tuesday editions.

"One more to go, and we'll be back in business," said Walter N. Thayer, president of the Herald Tribune and unofficial spokesman for the Publishers Association of New York.

Bertram A. Powers, president of Local 6 of the International Typographical Union, AFL-CIO, said his men could be back at work three hours or less after the photoengravers ratified a new

Reversed Vote

In voting to end their strike, the printers reversed a decision last Sunday in which they rejected by a scant 64 votes a contract agreement accepted by their own negotiators. The contract terms had been proposed by Mayor Robert F. Wagner, who served as a mediator in the drawn-out labor

But the printers voted Sunday to accept that same contract. Thus they ended a strike they began on Dec. 8-a strike in which other unions subsequently joined ways the major figures.

With the exception of the photoengravers, the eight other unions in the newspaper industry-including the AFL-CIO Newspaper Guild -have all reached some sort of agreement with the publishers.

The Silent Electronic War

Ancient art of espionage has reached a remarkable state of sophistication when the enemy is intercepted, escorted to his quest, allowed the desired number of peeks, then all but given a farewell wag of the wings.

Coal Has Promising Future

The United Mine Workers Union, after supporting a policy of automating the coal mines of America for some thirty years, is now reportedly turning against the installation of new automatic equipment.

One reason is that small mines, which can neither afford the newest wrinkles in machinery nor the high union wage scales extracted by John L. Lewis from the operators in many a dramatic bargaining session, have been going non-union in their rates. One can sympathize with the newly unemployed union miners in small mountain communities who have seen their old livelihoods and their hard-won "social gains" go down the drain under pressure from the big automated mines. Nevertheless, it remains demonstrably true that if John L. Lewis, when he was active boss of the miners union, had not supported the big mine operators in their desire to automate, the miners as a whole would be far worse off than they now happen to be.

Everyone knows in a general way that coal has been up against the stiffest sort of competition from other fuels in recent years. But how many people know the astounding figures? Once upon a time the locomotives of America burned 130 million tons of coal a year; now, with the prevalence of the oilburning, diesel-drawn train, the railroads use only a scant three million tons of coal. Once upon a time the coal-burning furnace was practically universal, consuming some 100 million tons of coal annually. Today the so-called "space heating" market requires only thirty million tons. These are horrifying drop-backs. The oil industry, of course, has benefited mightily-and, with the development of cheap atomic power, uranium mining stands to profit from coal's further discomfiture.

Despite the conquest of the markets by oil, however, the coal industry has done a remarkable job at living off its own diminished volume. In 1947 bituminous coal production stood at 630 million tons a year; today the annual figure is 420 million tons. The loss of some 200 million tons would have been fatal to practically everybody in the industry, the United Mine Workers included, if the operators, with the blessing of John L. Lewis, had not turned to new automatic equipment. In 1958 Mr. Lewis of the mine union, George H. Love of the Consolidation Coal Company, William L. Wearly of the Joy Manufacturing Company, Philip Sporn of the American Electric Power Company, Walter Tuohy of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company, a few other farsighted men got together to form something called the National Coal Policy Conference. This organization has been fighting the industry's battle as a whole, with a quite noticeable degree of success.

In certain mountain pockets of eastern Kentucky and West Virginia coal is still a "sick industry." But it can no longer be described as sick in the regions where thick coal veins permit the use of modern methods. And the future, suddenly, promises a grand resurgence. The National Coal Policy Conference, extrapolating its curves on the graphs of tomorrow, says that the demand for electrical energy will increase by seven-fold in the next forty years.

Even if nuclear power proves fully able to take care of our energy needs in spots that are far from easy access to coal or oil, it takes a wildly optimistic nuclear power man to visualize atomic power accounting for more than twenty per cent of the energy needs of America in the year 2,000 A.D. And, since water power sites are limited, this means a much wider scope for coal. The National Coal Policy Conference says that for electric generation alone in 2,000 A. D. the U. S. coal industry will have to provide fifty per cent more coal than

David Lilienthal, the first head of the Atomic Energy Commission, is a recent convert to coal optimism. In a speech at Princeton, N. J., he spoke of the "peaceful atom" as something "just as good as coal" for use in some places, but certainly no better than fossil fuels for general use. "In the mysterious way by which changes take place at the most unexpected places." he said, "suddenly coal in the last decade has made

To continue getting their share of the benefit from these strides, the United Mine Workers, now bossed by the little-known "Tony" Boyle, had better think twice before they reject John L. Lewis's old policy of welcoming improvements in coal technology.

So to get guidance from the military as to what should or Majority Control Or A Multilateral Farce?

President Kennedy's project for a multilateral nuclear force attached to NATO was hastily improvised at Nassau, as a quick way out of the Skybolt squabble with the British.

Yet this hurried improvisation with bits and pieces of old longneglected plans has suddenly acquired an enormous potential, either for good or evil. Either the President has half-unintentionally begun to grope his way toward a solution of the West's most deep-rooted problem. Or he has incautiously got the most dangerous sort of bear by the tail.

It is quite certain that the President will find he has a bear by the tail unless he is willing to amend his project rather radically. As it now stands, the nuclear arms of the surface ships and/or submarines of the multilateral force will be controlled by a committee of all the contrib ting members. Each committee member, conspicuously including the U. S., will have a veto on the use of the force.

The political handicap of the American veto needs no underlining. But that is not the only difficulty. The one nation-one veto rule virtually insures the neutralization of the proposed force, even if the U.S. should wish to give the order to fire away. There is really no answer at all to the argument made by German Defense Minister Kai-Uwe von Hassel to the President's Special Ambassador, Livingston Mer-

"Suppose," said von Hassel, "the next British Prime Minister is Harold Wilson who is close to being a unilateral nuclear disarmer. What use will this force be then, with the veto rule? The fact is, at least one veto must always be expected in such a committee, By Joseph Alsop

This is why Gen. de Gaulle's nuclear advisor, Gen. Pierre Gallois, has called the multilateral force a "multilateral farce." As the project now stands, in truth, it is one of those Madison Ave. gestures for which American policymakers have always had a weak-

The simple remedy has been proposed, meanwhile, by the Germans. They want majority control of the multilateral force, not right away, but at a date some years hence when the force is coming into being and becoming operational. Majority control will both make the force militarily useful and remove the political curse of the persisting U. S. veto.

U. S. acceptance of the German proposal will do much more than this, however. Once majority control is conceded, the multilateral force will automatically become the first step towards a truly European deterrent.

In this way, the Germans have offered President Kennedy a very great opportunity. The fact must be faced in Washington-it should have been faced long before this -that the U.S. cannot hope to retain forever a virtual monopoly of the effective nuclear striking power of the West. Any other view of the matter is silly wishfulness.

Economically and politically, Europe has long since east off its dependence on the U.S. Europe will not therefore rest content forever, any more than the British or Gen. de Gaulle have rested content, to depend on the U.S. for the supreme means of self-defense.

If the Americans do not offer a solution of this problem, the Europeans, conspicuously including the Germans, will soon or late attempt a much more unpalatable solution of their own. The German amendment to the multilateral force offers a remarkably acceptable solution, as well as a way to avoid a grave foreign policy de-

Argument was to no avail. Even the offer to "X" out certain material got nowhere. For years during the war, and since, I had submitted information to the armed services for guidance on what might be inimical to the defense of the country, if published; and still prize a letter from Gen. Omar Bradley, former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, thanking me for my cooperation.

All this took place in 1957. Six years have passed, and I have not yet got that memo back. However, here is the payoff While I was leaning over backward trying to cooperate, Art Sylvester of the Newark, N.J., News, published the Nickerson memo. He got it from another source and did not bother to clear it with the Pentagon. He is the man who now sits in the Penta-

He showed them the historic desks of Daniel Webster, now occupied by Sen. Norris Cotton of New Hampshire: Huey Long, now occupied by his son, Sen, Russell Long of Louisiana; and Jefferson Davis of Mississippi, one-time president of the Confed-

Davis's desk, now occupied by Sen. John Stennis of Mississippi, should have been of particular interest to Oliver Petteway, because his ancestors were the chief issue in the war fought between the North and South.

The Vice President pointed to a scar on the side of Jefferson Davis's desk and explained: "During the Civil War, a Union soldier found out that this was Jeff Davis's desk and hacked it with his sword. They tried to patch up the scar but it's still there."

Vice President Johnson also showed the boys the snuff box behind a chair near the entrance, once used by the founding fathers but now kept merely as a curiosity. Even the brass cuspidors which once adorned the Senate floor have been removed.

Johnson also pulled out the drawer of Senator Mansfield's desk, the desk that majority leaders of the Senate have used for some time. It was not locked, and Johnson knew from experience that it never held anything confidential. Pointing to the bottom of the desk drawer, he showed the two boys the names of previous distinguished Senate leaders-Alben Barkley of Kentucky, Scott Lucas of Illinois, Lyndon Johnson of Texas. Mike Mansfield of Montana. These were the men who had guided the Senate through its more recent history. As he pointed to the names, one of the former leaders, Scott Lucas, came back to his old haunts and waved to the Vice President from the doorway. For the Senate is an attraction to anyone who has ever sat in its stately chamber

Finally, Johnson let the two boys sit in the leather swivel chair from which, as Vice President, he presides over the Senate. I am not sure the youngsters knew the significance of that seat or how many important men had sat there - more recently Teddy Roosevelt, Calvin Coolidge, Harry Truman - all became President The boys bounced up and down on the wide cushions, seemed impressed with the fact that the chair swiveled easily.

Vice President Johnson happens to have two lovely daughters, no sons. He was being a "Big Brother" to these youngsters, practicing the motto of Big Brothers: "No man ever stands so straight as when he stoops to help a boy.' Behind The Scenes

One of the most effective backstage lobbyists for the Air Force is Mendel Rivers, the silverhaired Congressman from the Charleston, S.C., low country. Rivers knows how to wheel and deal and does it effectively for Air Force appropriations. In return, he gets free rides almost whenever he wants an Air Force plane

One of Secretary of Defense McNamara's problems on Capitol Hill is that Rep. Carl Vinson of Milledgeville, Ga., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, thinks that he, Vinson, is Secretary of Defense.

More than one-third of all women who develop German measles during the first four months of pregnancy are headed for trouble. Some lose the baby or give birth to a child with a developmental defect such as cataract, congenital heart disease, deafness, or mental retardation. It is for this reason that we hope all girls and young women have the disease before they undertake pregnancy.

In the future the physician may ask the bride-to-be during the premartial examination whether she has had German measles. This is not an idle question because the causative virus has been isolated. This means two things: The disease can be produced in susceptible persons; and the discovery paves the way for the development of a vaccine.

However, here is the payoff. While I was leaning over backward trying to cooperate. Art Sylvester of the Newark, N.J., News, published the Nickerson memo. He got it from another source and did not bother to clear it with the Pentagon. He is the man who now sits in the Pentagon supposedly censoring or 'managing' the news.

Note - I still think Art is one of the most efficient of the brass has to have held the post of Pentagon press officer. Little Brothers In Senate

Vice president Lyndon Johnson, whom his wife accuses of being a boy at heart, took two boys through the Senate Chamber the other day. One was Warren Whitlock, 15, the other Oliver M. Petteway, 14, both "little brothers" under the guidance of the Big Brothers organization.

He showed them the historic desks of Daniel Webster, now occupied by Sen. Norris Cotton of New Hampshire; Huey Long, now occupied by his son, Sen. Russell Long of Louisiana; and Jefferson Davis of Mississippi, one-time president of the Confed-

Davis's desk, now occupied by Sen. John Stennis of Mississippi, should have been of particular interest to Oliver Petteway, because his ancestors were the chief issue in the war fought between the North and South.

The Vice President pointed to a scar on the side of Jefferson Davis's desk and explained: "During the Civil War, a Union soldier found out that this was Jeff Davis's desk and hacked it with the scar but it's still there."

Vice President Johnson also showed the boys the snuff box behind a chair near the entrance, once used by the founding fathers but now kept merely as a curiosity. Even the brass cuspidors which once adorned the Senate floor have been removed.

Johnson also pulled out the drawer of Senator Mansfield's desk, the desk that majority leaders of the Senate have used for some time. It was not locked, and Johnson knew from experience that it never held anything confidential. Pointing to the bottom of the desk drawer, he showed the two boys the names of previous distinguished Senate leaders-Alben Barkley of Kentucky, Scott Lucas of Illinois, Lyndon Johnson of Texas. Mike Mansfield of Montana. These were the men who had guided the Senate through its more recent history.

As he pointed to the names, one of the former leaders, Scott Lucas, came back to his old haunts and waved to the Vice President from the doorway. For the Senate is an attraction to anyone who has ever sat in its stately chamber

Finally, Johnson let the two boys sit in the leather swivel chair from which, as Vice President, he presides over the Senate. I am not sure the youngsters knew the significance of that seat or how many important men had sat there - more recently Teddy Roosevelt, Calvin Coolidge, Harry Truman - all became President The boys bounced up and down on the wide cushions, seemed impressed with the fact that the chair swiveled easily.

Vice President Johnson happens to have two lovely daughters, no sons. He was being a "Big Brother" to these youngsters, practicing the motto of Big Brothers: "No man ever stands so straight as when he stoops to help a boy.' Behind The Scenes

One of the most effective backstage lobbyists for the Air Force is Mendel Rivers, the silverhaired Congressman from the Charleston, S.C., low country. Majority Control Or A Multilateral Farce?

By Joseph Alsop

President Kennedy's project for a multilateral nuclear force attached to NATO was hastily improvised at Nassau, as a quick way out of the Skybolt squabble with the British.

Yet this hurried improvisation with bits and pieces of old longneglected plans has suddenly acquired an enormous potential, either for good or evil. Either the President has half-unintentionally begun to grope his way toward a solution of the West's most deep-rooted problem. Or he has incautiously got the most dangerous sort of bear by the tail.

It is quite certain that the President will find he has a bear by the tail unless he is willing to amend his project rather radically. As it now stands, the nuclear arms of the surface ships and/or submarines of the multilateral force will be controlled by a committee of all the contributing members. Each committee member, conspicuously including the U. S., will have a veto on the use of the force.

The political handicap of the American veto needs no underlining. But that is not the only difficulty. The one nation-one veto rule virtually insures the neutralization of the proposed force, even if the U.S. should wish to give the order to fire away. There is really no answer at all to the argument made by German Defense Minister Kai-Uwe von Hassel to the President's Special Ambassador, Livingston Mer-

"Suppose," said von Hassel, 'the next British Prime Minister is Harold Wilson who is close to being a unilateral nuclear disarmer. What use will this force be then, with the veto rule? The fact is, at least one veto must always be expected in such a committee, no matter what the provocation

This is why Gen. de Gaulle's nuclear advisor, Gen. Pierre Gallois, has called the multilateral force a "multilateral farce." As the project now stands, in truth. it is one of those Madison Ave. gestures for which American policymakers have always had a weak-

The Germans and other Europeans, who are being asked to pay a large share of the very heavy costs of the force, are not going to lay out so much good money for a Madison Ave. gesture. Yet the failure of the President's project at this time will be downright catastrophic.

Such a failure will be taken as a great personal triumph by Gen. de Gaulle, and will be acted on by him as such. As for the President, he cannot afford another grandiose start piddling out into noth-

Edith Green (D.-Ore.) has gone on a poetry kick. She's resorted to the rhymed word to convey her views on a number of subjects to her constituents in her weekly news

To begin her new series, for instance, she opened her letters with the following bit of rhyme, which, like any good poem, is thoughtful as well as delightful:

ing. His power to lead the West can be fatally impaired. The simple remedy has been proposed, meanwhile, by the Germans. They want majority control of the multilateral force, not right away, but at a date some years hence when the force is coming into being and becoming operational. Majority control will both make the force militarily useful and remove the political curse of the persisting U. S. veto. U. S. acceptance of the German proposal will do much more than this, however. Once majority control is conceded, the multilateral force will automatically become the first step towards a truly European deterrent In this way, the Germans have offered President Kennedy a very great opportunity. The fact must be faced in Washington-it should have been faced long before this -that the U. S. cannot hope to retain forever a virtual monopoly of the effective nuclear striking power of the West. Any other view of the matter is silly wishfulness. Economically and politically, Europe has long since east off its dependence on the U.S. Europe will not therefore rest content forever, any more than the British or Gen. de Gaulle have rested content, to depend on the U.S. for the supreme means of self-de-

If the Americans do not offer a solution of this problem, the Europeans, conspicuously including the Germans, will soon or late attempt a much more unpalatable solution of their own. By Jim Bishop

All columnists are interviewed by school editors. Sometimes, they arrive at my home in delegations, sometimes singly. Once in awhile, the work is done by mail. The questions seldom vary. The answers, never. It runs like

Q. Is your true name Jim or James? A. James, but I prefer Jim. Q. How long have you been writing professionally? A. 34 years. Q. Where were you born? A. Jersey City, N. J., Nov. 21, 1907. Q. Do other members of your family write? A. Only for money

Q. Briefly, what is your family background? A. Father is John Michael, police lieuce, ant. now 79. Mother was Jennie Tier Bishop, died at age 73, Aug. 1957. One brother, John, 53, sister Adele, 50. Daughter Virginia Lee Frechette, 25, mother of five. Daughter Gayle, 19, mother of one. Two step-daughters: Karen, 10; Kathleen, 8. First wife, Elinor Dunning: died Oct. 1957. Married Kelly Stone: May 1961. Housekeeper: Frau Katherina Rook, 54.

Q. What was your first newspaper job! A. N. Y. News, copy boy, 1929. Q. Did you go to journalism school? A. No, didn't get to college. Q. Who is your favorite author? A. Carl Sandburg. Q. When did you decide to become a writer. A. In Miami, 1925. Bought a N.Y. newspaper at corner of N. E. 2nd Ave. and Flagler St. Read a column called "About Broadway" by Mark Hellinger. Decided I'd like to write like that Q. Who gave you your first break? A. Frank Carson, day city editor of News. Sent me on an assignment about Negro boy stoned to death by competitors in school track meet. I ruined the story by over-writing. Q. What is the most difficult task in the field of writing? A. To say something simply.

A. What was the turning point in your career? A. writing "The Day Lincoln Was Shot." The style was copied from my father's police reports. It has been imitated since by many writers. Q. What was your lowest point? A. While writing the Lincoln book, I was broke. Nothing in the bank, no income, owed $3,100. Q. How well did the book sell? A. including book clubs and Reader's Digest Book Club about 3,000,000 copies.

Q. Did you have other low periods? A. Lots of them. Laid off as Mirror reporter 1932, wrote biography of Hellinger 1951 which didn't sell, wrote biography of Jackie Gleason ("The Golden Ham") 1955, which won awards, no sales; took over dying Liberty Magazine as Executive Editor and strangled it; walked out of Collier's as an editor just before rigor mortis set in; ouilt a $23,-000 house for $42,000 and lost my

Q. What was your biggest break? A. Being introduced to William Randolph Hearst Jr. He asked me to return to writing for newspapers while writing books. Best move I made in a lifetime of errors. Q. Are you about to start another book? A. Yes. The research is almost finished. It will be called "The Trial of the Rosenbergs.

Q. Do you believe that writers are born, not made? A. No. Practice makes the writer. The best practice is to try to tell a story in the fewest number of words, mostly of one syllable. The writer who uses abstract and archaic words is afraid of his work. Q. What's so difficult about writing short sentences and short words? A. Try it.

Q. Where is your office? A. An old two-car garage in the back of the house has been converted to a library. Q. If you had it all to do over again-. A. No changes. I learned more from the mistakes than from the hits. Q. What did early newspaper work teach you that you couldn't have learned in school? A. Discipline. Each of my city editors gave me but one crack at a story. ick or well, I learned to do my best every day. Today, I do not have to wait for a mood to move me to the typewriter. The clock is enough

Q. Do you think there is as much opportunity today for a journalism student as when you started? A. No. In spite of the broadening of the field to include television, radio and public relations, there are more schools, more students than journalism can assimilate. Q. Do you think when I graduate that you might speak to somebody-? A. I was afraid you'd never get to the

Isolated Virus Paves Way For Measles Vaccine

More than one-third of all women who develop German measles during the first four months of pregnancy are headed for trouble. Some lose the baby or give birth to a child with a developmental defect such as cataract, congenital heart disease, deafness, or mental retarda-It is for this reason that we hope all girls and young women have the disease before they undertake pregnancy.

In the future the physician may ask the bride-to-be during the premartial examination whether she has had German measles. This is not an idle question because the causative virus has been isolated. This means two things: The disease can be proin susceptible persons; and the discovery paves the way for the development of a vaccine.

By Dr. Theodore R. Van Dellen

The ideal time to have rubella is during childhod and inmmunity usually is lifelong. The disease is called the three-daymeasles because it generally lasts that long. It resembles ordinary measles the first day, scarlet fever the second, and is gone by the third.

The incubation period varies from 5 to 21 days but the majority become ill early in the third week after exposure. Early symptoms are a slight head cold, sore throat, headache, and possibly fever. The true nature of the illness escapes detection until 24 hours later when the rash breaks out on the face and then spreads rapidly over the entire

No. 258 The "cheese-box on a raft," U.S.S. Monitor, made all its history in less than a year. Launched at Greenpoint, L. I., on Jan. 30, 1862, she fought her epochal battle with C.S.S. Virginia (ex-Merrimac) at Hampton Roads on March 9, and then was inactive until summer. Her gunpower was brought into play in McClellan's attempt to force his way up the James River to Richmond; she was in action at Drewry's Bluff and Malvern Hill.

In December, an attempt was made to take the Monitor down the coast to support a Union naval attack on Charleston. A gale that swept high seas across the flat deck made her unmaneuverable and in sinking condition. She went down Dec. 30 after some of her men had gotten away to an escort ship.

MODERN SCIENTIFIC DRY CLEANING

No. 258 The "cheese-box on a raft," U.S.S. Monitor, made all its history in less than a year. Launched at Greenpoint, L. I., on Jan. 30, 1862, she fought her epochal battle with C.S.S. Virginia (ex-Merrimac) at Hampton Roads on March 9, and then was inactive until summer. Her gunpower was brought into play in McClellan's attempt to force his way up the James River to Richmond; she was in action at Drewry's Bluff and Malvern Hill.

In December, an attempt was made to take the Monitor down the coast to support a Union naval attack on Charleston. A gale that swept high seas across the flat deck made her unmaneuverable and in sinking condition. She went down Dec. 30 after some of her men had gotten away to an escort ship.

Freak Injury Caused Moore's Brain Damage

Vibrating Ring Rope Struck Base Of Skull

LOS ANGELES (UPI)-A freak injury-not a punch- in which the back of his head snapped into the lower ringstrand probably caused boxer Davey Moore's critical brain damage, a team of neurosurgeons said Sunday.

Planning Report Discusses Needs

Nine of Allegany County's 30 elementary schools and six of nine high schools were filled to rated capacity or more during the 1961-62 school year, according to the report on public school facilities and recreation areas of the county prepared for the Allegany County Planning and Zoning Commission

Although this 21-page report, prepared by Julian Tarrant of Richmond, Va., senior associate of Ladislas Segoe and Associates, Cincinnati, Ohio, was completed last June, its distribution to interested citizens of the county was started only last week.

This article will deal with the portion of the report dealing with the public schools of the county Scope Of Report

An introductory paragraph in the report notes that the county's master plan is concerned primarily with the number, size and of community development. Inthan $600,000 a year, any saving that might be effected through the report says.

A table on elementary school enrollment in the county reveals that the 30 elementary schools have a total of 360½ classrooms LaSalle Senior with a pupil capacity of 9,650. The enrollment stood at 8,711, which was 90 per cent of the elementary school capacity.
